

In his autobiography, Bewick wrote about his feelings moving from home:
"I can only say my heart was like to break ... as I bid farewell to the whinney wilds - to Mickley Bank, the Stob Cross hill, to the water banks, the woods and to particular trees, and even to the large hollow old elm which had lain (perhaps) for centuries past